

The Brothers' Adventure to a Hidden Dino World

Written and Illustrated by Croix Vallejo

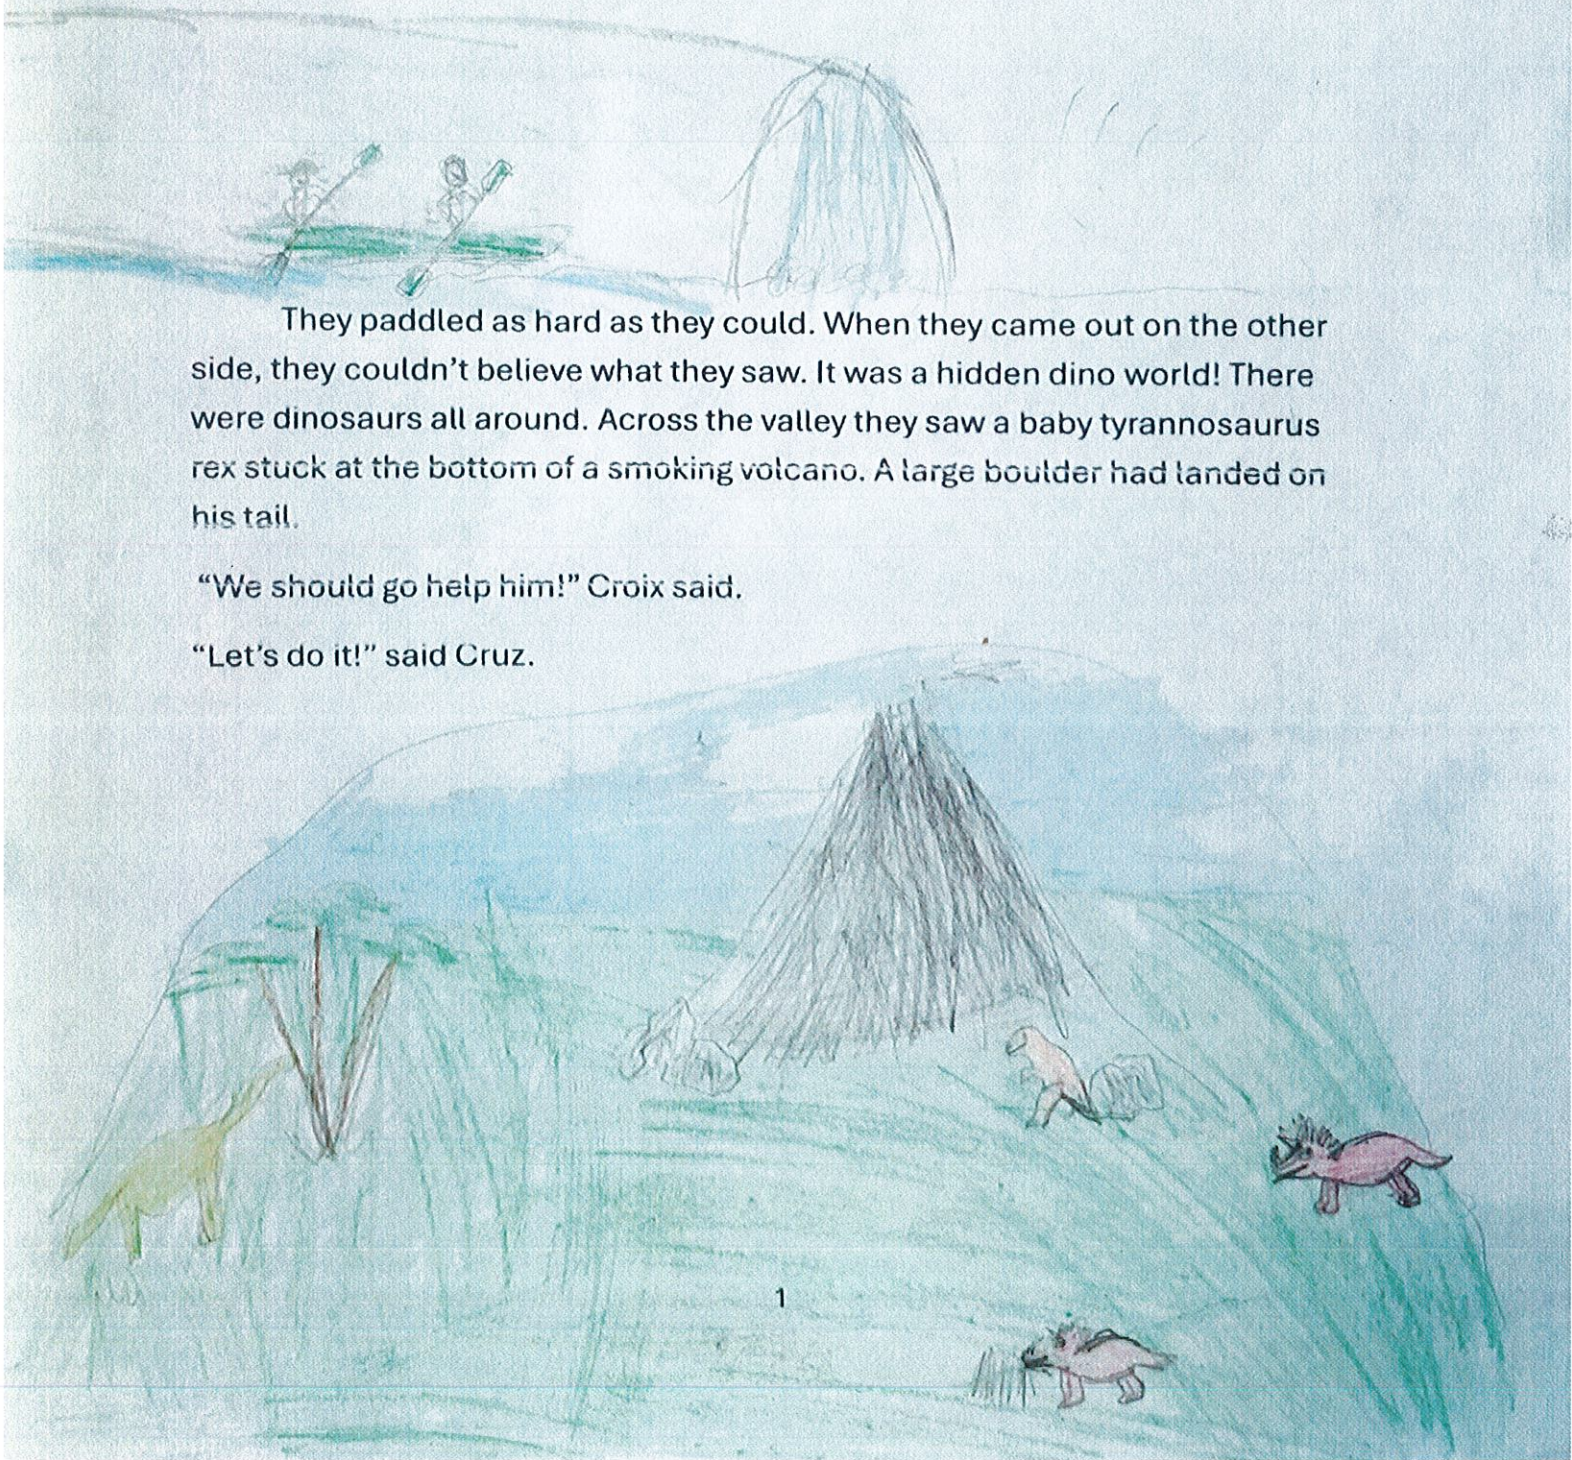

[Handwritten signature]

There were two brothers, Croix and Cruz. They were kayaking through a cave and suddenly came to the bottom of a waterfall. They heard a loud roar from the other side. They had to go through it and find out what made the noise.

They paddled as hard as they could. When they came out on the other side, they couldn't believe what they saw. It was a hidden dino world! There were dinosaurs all around. Across the valley they saw a baby tyrannosaurus rex stuck at the bottom of a smoking volcano. A large boulder had landed on his tail.

"We should go help him!" Croix said.

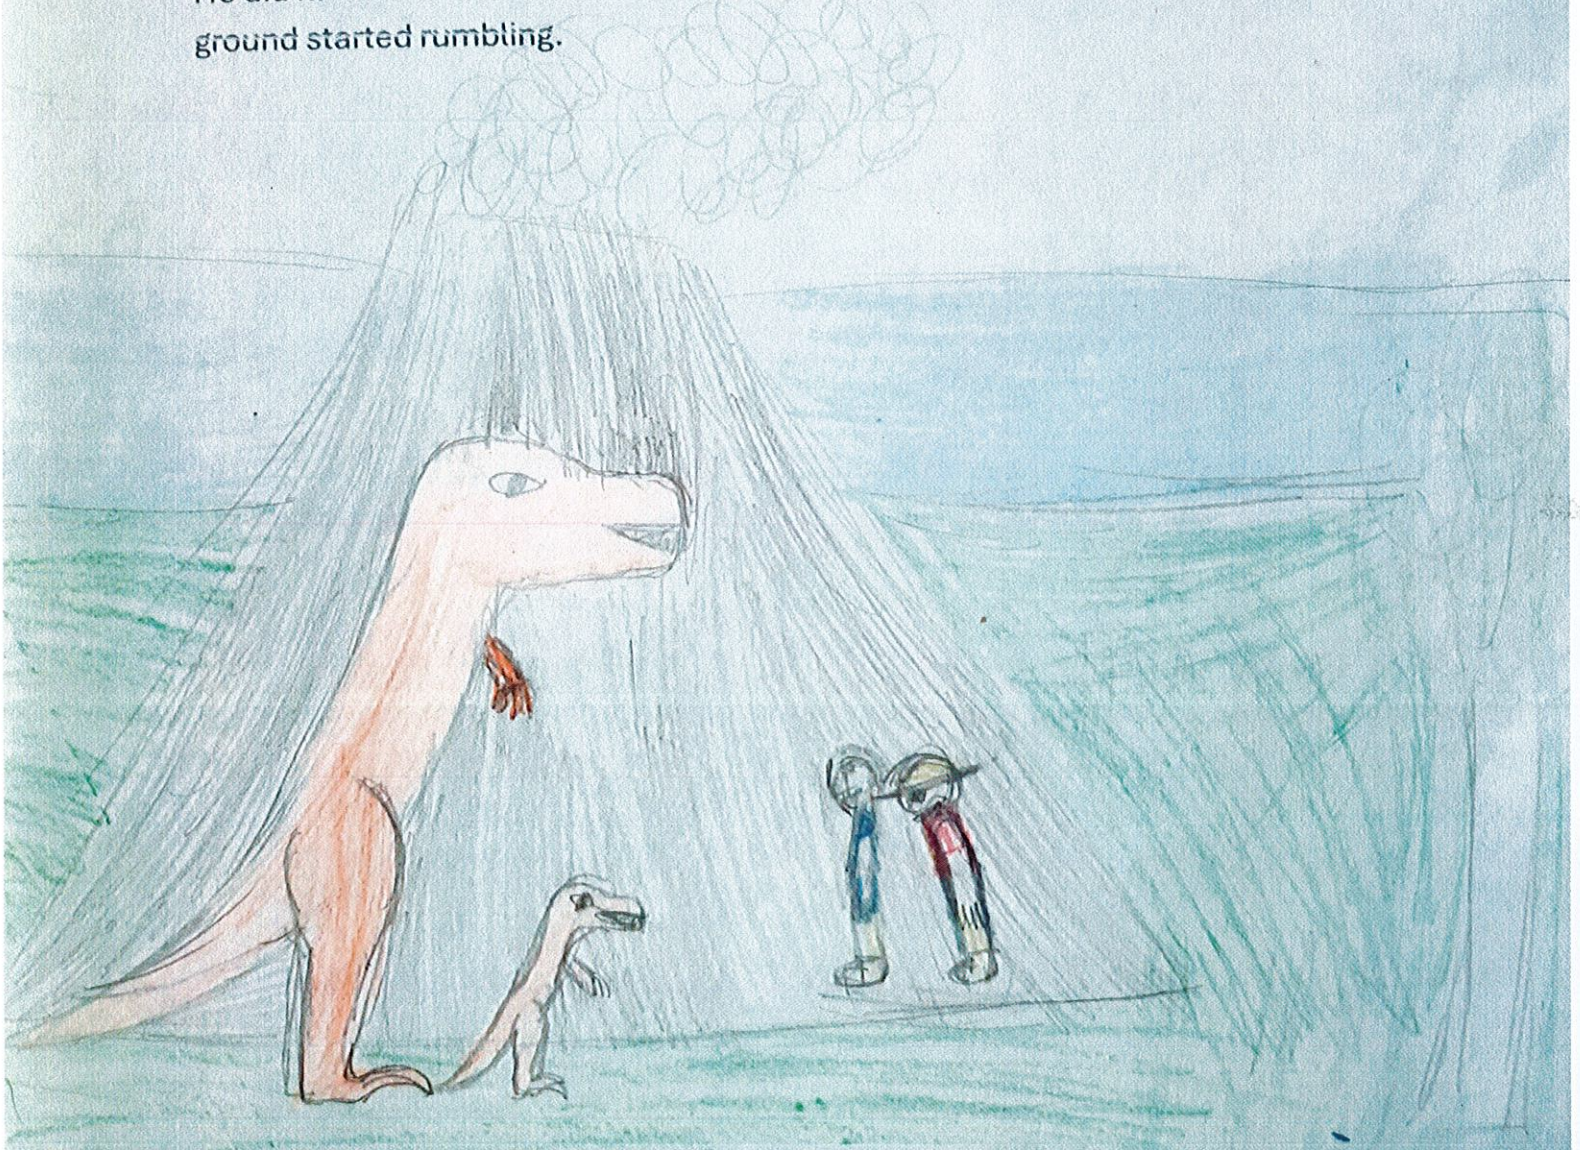

"Let's do it!" said Cruz.

They ran toward the baby but were surprised when the mother jumped in their way. She thought they were going to hurt her baby. She let out a loud roar. She must have been the one they heard.

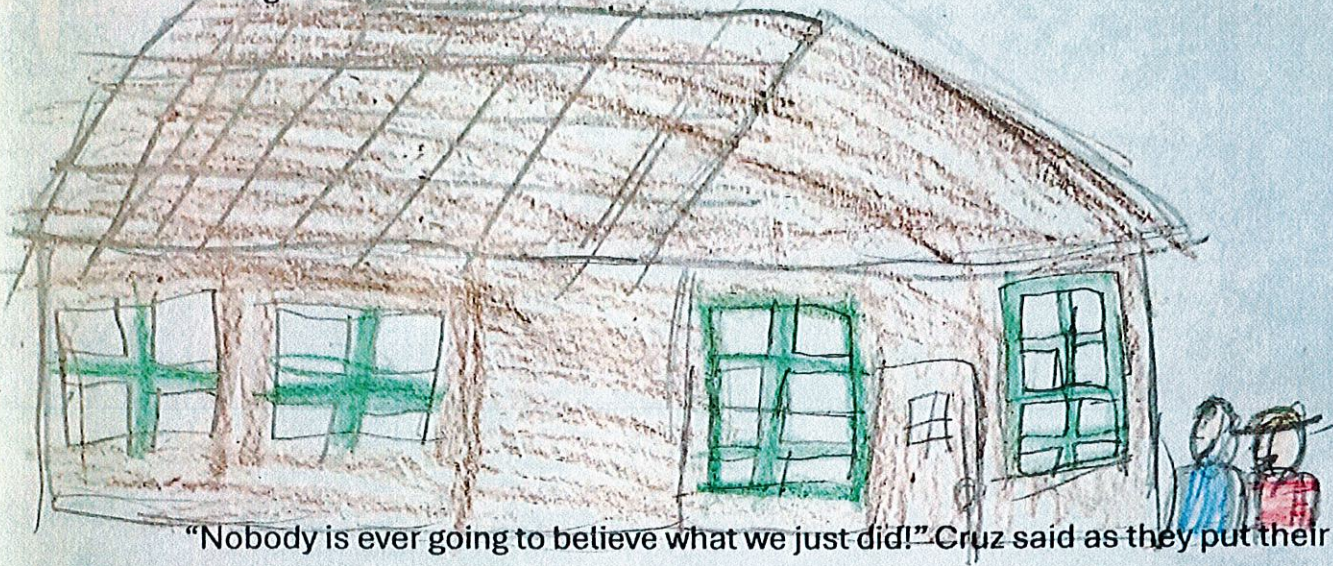

"Cruz, you distract the mom while I get the baby," instructed Croix

Cruz ran off to the left, yelling to get the mom's attention. She chased after him. Croix hurried to free the baby, pushing the rock with all his strength. He did it! The momma dino was so happy her baby was safe. Just then, the ground started rumbling.

"We better get out of here! That volcano is going to blow!" shouted Croix.

The brothers ran back to their kayak, paddled back through the waterfall, through the cave and back home.

"Nobody is ever going to believe what we just did!" Cruz said as they put their paddles away.

"They'll think we're crazy!" agreed Croix.

"Maybe we should just keep this between us," suggested Cruz.

"Agreed," replied Croix.

The brothers went inside and got a juice from the refrigerator. They sat and wondered if they would ever get to visit the hidden dino world again.

